Be Thankful for the Crash

Nov. 25, 2026--As an independent candidate for the presidency of the United States, I am thankful for what I intend that we, the American people, are about to do to regain that freedom and integrity which once made our nation, especially after the Second World War, the hope for much of the world. I give thanks that with you, we can finally deliver on President Franklin Roosevelt's intention, which he announced to an apoplectic Winston Churchill, that after fascism was defeated in Europe, colonialism would be eradicated from the face of the earth, and every nation would have its independence. Though the assassination of President John F. Kennedy disrupted the progress of our republic, we can be thankful that his call for peace at American University and at the United Nations established an appropriate presidential standard, which with your support and collaboration, I intend to fulfill.

On this Thanksgiving Day, after three years of genocide in Gaza and nearly five years of a murderous proxy war using Ukraine against Russia (both of which our government has been supporting), we should give thanks for our own circumstances: that we are not suffering as horribly as some others on the planet. Our children do not walk to school under threat of being bombed. We should resolve to act in such a way as to end the torment of our fellow human beings.

At this moment, I would also like to give thanks to the people of the Wampanoag Nation, who received the Pilgrims and ensured their survival through that first difficult Winter. My own ancestor, Peregrine White, was born aboard the Mayflower while it was waiting offshore to determine where people would settle. It is doubtful that he would have survived but for the help of the Wampanoag people. I am aware that the descendants of the people who helped my ancestors may have come to regret their generosity, for it ultimately was repaid with cruelty and barbarism.

We, the living, as Abraham Lincoln told us at Gettysburg, owe it to those who made great sacrifices (whether willingly or unwillingly sacrificed) to give meaning to their lives by fulfilling the expressed intention of the founders of the United States, as stated in the Declaration of Independence and Constitution. Namely, that this republic, with all of its shortcomings, would prove to all humanity that self-government, with "liberty and justice for all," without an emperor, is the form of government worthy of the dignity of man, and that human beings are capable of guarding that sacred trust.

Elizabeth Willing Powel, a prominent political force in her own right and wife of the mayor of Philadelphia, is recorded to have asked in September 1787, "Dr. Franklin, what have you given us, a republic, or a monarchy?" Franklin replied, not lightly, knowing the magnitude of the experiment, and aware that the failure to abolish slavery left a festering vulnerability, "A republic, if you can keep it."

How might we today give meaning to the lives of those who have perished because of human failure to become truly good?

Unlike mere animals, humans are capable of self-perfection. Not perfection, per se, which is not possible in this domain, although we can imagine perfection in our mind. The musician holds in the mind's ear the ideal and practices long hours to never fully reach it. The visual artist strives similarly. The scientist may get a bit more satisfaction when a new hypothesis resolves some paradox which couldn't be solved under a prior theory, and something suddenly "works." But before long, someone will discover that this new knowledge has not brought us to a full understanding of the universe, and another paradox emerges to tickle the mind until a solution is found. This is the joy of being human, and the universe has been created in such a way that the possibilities to improve our relationship to it are never ending.

Somewhere in the 1960's, despite the determination to cling to President Kennedy's mission to reach the Moon (which was a breakthrough for all mankind), four assassinations, the Vietnam war, the rock, drug, sex, counterculture and the environmentalist movement derailed what had been hard won progress toward perfecting the Union. Slavery had been abolished, women had finally been allowed to vote, electricity had been delivered to every home, the standard of living had continued to rise and there was an optimism about the future.

But, after the shocks of the 60's, designed by the British Tavistock Institute, with MI6, the CIA and Hollywood, the morale of the American people collapsed, with the result that today, nobody thinks it's odd to have successive presidents who are in various stages of cognitive decline, and members of Congress who are literally catatonic.

I say it's time for a change!

Thankfully, the majority of mankind, in part actually inspired by our defeat of the British Empire over two centuries ago as well as by positive features of their own cultures and histories, has moved forward to create the basis for freedom by eliminating poverty, as China has done both by lifting over 850 million of its own people out of poverety and by expanding its Belt and Road Initiative. The majority of nations do not believe that might makes right and, at the U.N., have voted to lift the murderous embargo on Cuba as well as to recognize the rights of the Palestinian people, even though the current structure of that organization hasn't allowed such popular sentiment to make the policy. The nations of Africa are joining with Russia and China to electrify the continent and connect city to city and port to port without passing through London, Brussels, or Paris. The nations of Ibero-America are building deep ports and great corridors of transportation also in collaboration with China, much to the consternation of Marco Rubio and his failing "Shield of the Americas." The majority of the human race is leaving colonialism behind.

Despite the incredible venality that has passed his lips, and the horrific crimes committed under his administration, President Donald Trump sat down for talks in Shenzhen with President Putin of Russia and President Xi of China. They affirmed that nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought. Let us be thankful for that.

Let us also be thankful that a rotten, stinking financial system is so near its final collapse that Jensen Huang had to be reinstated at Nvidia just to push back that date with destiny by hours or days or weeks. But it is definitely going to crash.

Yes, be thankful that the universe does not tolerate irrational behavior for long, and this financial bubble is going to go the way of all bubbles. Therein lies our opportunity to reassert the principles, expressed also by a very good American Pope Leo XIV (for whom we also give thanks), that the purpose of economy is to serve the well-being of humanity, and not vice versa.

The moment of opportunity is upon us, ready or not. The American genius Lyndon LaRouche gave us Four New Laws, starting with reinstating Franklin Roosevelt's Glass-Steagall Act to reorganize the system and a national bank to replace the Federal Reserve. Let us beat our military industrial swords into plowshares to build desperately needed water and power infrastructure, and let us finally fully fund the development of thermonuclear fusion energy. Let the Epstein-class billionaires and the intelligence agencies they own or that own them (who knows?) pay the price for their folly by eating their losses, while sitting comfortably behind bars.

Let us be thankful for the impending demise of the trans-Atlantic financial system which creates the opportunity to do good.
